

Fajardo. Tuesday.

Dear Bishop:

Just a line before I sail for Vieques to give you a message I forgot when writing to you this morning.

There seems to be a very fair crop of coffee at Quebrada Limon and I have just heard that the price is especially good this year $25.<sup>00</sup> a quintal. I think it would be wise for you to write the Don in charge (I forget his name this minute) not to sell any until you arrive, unless it be to some of the missions or the hospital in which case he should simply take note of the amount delivered and let you arrange the price with them later. This may be a great help in getting the farm work started. As to the people at the house, I think you might designate a certain amount to be given them per week.

Miss Lovett would require very little as she does not care for coffee.

With warm regards in haste
I am very sincerely and affectionately,
Chas. Colver.
